OFM Offers Its Own ‘Stimulus Plan’ for 2010

Office and school furniture company releases special line of low-priced, high-quality office chairs named after U.S. economic recovery effort

Holly Spring, N.C. - OFM, a leading family-owned office and school furniture manufacturer, distributor and wholesaler, announced today its own “stimulus plan”—a new product line of low-priced, high-quality faux leather office chairs called the Stimulus Series named for the efforts to restart the U.S. economy. Though the chairs are inexpensive, they still have the high-quality standards for commercial use that customers have learned to expect.

“We created this new series because we felt in a down economy people should be able to still sit in style and have the value and OFM level of quality that they are used to,” said Blake Zalberg, COO of OFM, who was behind the launch of the new product line. “A few years ago we introduced three similar models that were well-received so we saw this as an opportunity to expand our product line with the latest stylish designs.”

Recognizing that money is tight, OFM looked for a way to provide their dealers with a product that would help everyone from business executives to struggling health care professionals continue working in style without spending a lot of money. When the first three chairs proved wildly popular, OFM expanded the line to eight chairs and named it after the economic recovery efforts. The chairs are made using a material without animal byproducts to simulate the look and feel of real leather.

“Our economic stimulus plan is not just hundreds of millions of dollars cheaper than the federal government’s—it’s also more comfortable and stylish,” added Zalberg. “This is one stimulus plan that both Democrats and Republicans can agree on.”
